Science and drawing in the permaculture garden: practice, tips and implementation; “whys” and “hows” in a day at the garden

Claudia Carolino and Elsa Florencio are teachers at AEDCI. They have built the permaculture garden at the school and have been working with pupils in this setting for several years. Helena Bichão is Science teacher educator at The Norwegian University of Science and Technology.

In the last two to three years Claudia, Elsa and Helena have been cooperating to develop innovative ways of exploring science concepts in the permaculture garden. At the core of their pedagogical thinking and practice is drawing as a tool and strategy for learning science, for all children.
